'GARAGE SALE MYSTERY: A CASE OF MURDER'

Synopsis

Garage sale shopper extraordinaire Jennifer Shannon (Lori Loughlin) and her resale business partner Dani (Sarah Strange) are always on the hunt for amazing finds. They discover an old reel-to-reel tape recorder at a garage sale outside of town and Jennifer grabs it, knowing there's a tidy profit to be made. However, when one of the tapes that accompanies the machine is played back, Jennifer suspects that what they hear might just be a recording of an actual murder. Never one to let a hunch go unchecked, amateur sleuth Jennifer soon discovers the body of the recorder's former owner, a local doctor who had recently ceased leading a therapy group, and whose needy patients did not want him to end his doctor/patient relationship with them.

Having alerted Detective Lynwood (Kevin O'Grady), with whom Jennifer enjoys an "unofficial" working relationship, Jennifer makes some inquiries at the community center where Dr. Vedders' (Malcolm Stewart) therapy group met and soon discovers that any one of his patients may have resented his departure...but enough to kill him? Returning to the house where she purchased the recorder from Vedders' wife, Mae (Sarah-Jane Redmond), Jennifer learns that life between them was not always rosy, casting suspicion on the woman eager to sell off the doctor's belongings.

Investigating each suspect one-by-one in her own unassuming way, Jennifer begins eliminating possible killers and inches closer to the truth. However, Jennifer finds herself too close to the investigation for her own safety when one of her prime suspects leaves her sight for just moments and is killed and another menacingly shows up on her doorstep.

By the time Jennifer figures out that she's been following the wrong leads, she walks into a trap in which the killer plans to destroy her and make an escape without anyone knowing it was them all along.
